San Dimas Canyon Park Nature Center guide Hal Jones shows Billy and Karen Hetzel one of the snakes in the center's zoo, open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturdays through Thursdays. Guided nature walks and tours of the center are offered on Tuesdays. The center is in the northwest corner of the park, 1628 N. Sycamore Canyon Road, San Dimas.

Park programs expand your awareness of the outdoors

Many Southland recreational areas offer special interpretive programs designed to expand visitors' knowledge of the outdoors.

"Visits to a national forest, state park or nature center can be enhanced by guided hikes, campfire talks and special children's activities," according to Joni Hunt, travel publications editor for the Automobile Club of Southern California.

The club has compiled a list of interpretive programs offered in Southern California. Most are offered through Labor Day weekend, but it's best to confirm specific dates and times by phone prior to leaving home.

San Bernardino County

□ Southern Bernardino National Forest offers interpretive activities at the Barton Flats Visitor Information Center on state Route 38, east of Glass Road, and at nearby Greyback Amphitheater, 2½ miles farther east. Two- to three-hour nature hikes in the San Geronio Wilderness or the Barton Flats area begin at the visitor center on weekends. Listings of upcoming hikes are posted weekly at area campgrounds. Slide shows and lectures about the area are given at 8 p.m. Saturdays in the Greyback Amphitheater. For further details, call 794-1035.

Los Angeles County

□ San Dimas Canyon Park Nature Center, open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturdays through Thursdays, offers guided nature walks and tours of the center on Tuesdays. A small zoo with animals native to California, including bobcats and birds of prey, shares the nature center with a museum of natural history. A self-guided hiking pamphlet is offered and special group hikes for the young or handicapped can be arranged. The nature center is in the northwest corner of San Dimas Canyon Park, 1628 N. Sycamore Canyon Rd., San Dimas. For further information, call 599-7512.

□ Angeles National Forest, covering 95 percent of the San Gabriel Mountains, offers interpretive activities at three popular sites.

— Table Mountain campground, junction of state Route 2 and County Road N4, in the Big Pines area, hosts campfire programs Fridays and Saturdays, beginning at sunset. Easy to moderate nature hikes, lasting about one hour, leave at various times on weekends. For details, call 249-3504.

— The newly opened Chilao Visitor Center, just off Angeles Crest Highway (state Route 2) on Upper Chilao Road, is open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily and features exhibits of area plants, wildlife and history. Three self-guided hiking trails originate at the center; two paved trails are accessible for handicapped persons. Guided nature hikes leave the center at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. on weekends (except Aug. 22, when a 9 a.m. bird walk replaces the morning hike). One-hour children's nature programs, led by a ranger, begin Saturdays at 11 a.m.

Flea invasion plaguing pets in area cities

The Chinese calendar names 1982 the "Year of the Dog," but the Humane Society of the Chaffey Community calls it "the summer of the flea."

The Human Society says reports from veterinarians, groomers and pet owners indicate that fleas are now appearing in great numbers, causing extreme discomfort to cats and dogs. Humans are also fair game for fleas when the pest population increases.

Betty Fryman, general manager of the Chaffey Humane Society, explained that for really effective control, fleas must be attacked from three directions at once: on the animal, in the home and in the yard. If any one of these areas is neglected, the pet will have a new crop of fleas in a short time.

She also added that the attack must be carried on through the summer because most flea-killing preparations only destroy the adult pest and flea eggs continue to hatch as long as the weather is right.

"We are seeing dogs with serious skin conditions caused by fleas come into the shelter," Fryman said. "Many have lost their hair over large sections of their bodies."

Fryman explained that when a flea bites it injects a small amount of saliva into the skin. Some dogs become highly allergic to this saliva. They may scratch and chew madly at their skin until it is hairless, raw and may ooze serum.

The areas most likely to be affected are at the base of the tail, on the thighs and on the lower belly. In an allergic pet, the bite of just one flea can start up an immediate, intense itch, Fryman said.

Most adult animals can tolerate a few fleas, she said, but young pets or sick ones can die from anemia as fleas feed on the animal's blood.

"There are many jokes about dogs and fleas," said Fryman, "but fleas are a serious problem for pets in Southern California."

"Our climate is favorable many months of the year for fleas to thrive. The misery for pets is increased after the kind of cool, wet spring we experienced this year — ideal weather for fleas."

She said the only solution is to establish a tight schedule for controlling fleas and to stick to it.

For the pet, a good sponge-on dip or spray will last about a week if the animal has been thoroughly wetted, Fryman said. She warned to make sure any such preparation is safe if it will be used on a cat.

Weekly powdering can also be effective, she said, but the material must be rubbed well down into the coat.

Most pets can tolerate flea collars, but some animals may develop a sensitivity to the chemicals in them and the pet should be examined regularly for any sign of irritation.

A good flea shampoo or soap will kill fleas on an animal at the time of the bath, but won't provide much protection from new fleas, Fryman noted. She added that flea powder in a pet's bedding or dog house is another good idea, but cautioned that it is unwise to combine different types of control on an animal at the same time.

On another battlefield — in the home — commercially available "bombs" are reliable, but a thorough vacuuming is needed before they are used.

Marriott's Host International wins OIA food, gift service bid

By RICHARD PERAZA
Staff Writer

Banking on extensive growth for Ontario International Airport, Host International Inc., a division of the Marriott Corp., has put up nearly $3.5 million and at least another $1 million in facility improvements to win the local airport's food and gift service contract.

In a surprise move, Los Angeles Department of Airport Board commissioners recently awarded the contract to Host.

Airport spokesman Dennis Watson said board members had received five bids from various companies vying for the service last month and Host was not the highest.

But all companies except Host had failed to follow DOA specifications in making out their bids, which disqualified them.

Rather than go through the entire bid process a second time, commissioners opted to award the contract to the only company turning in a proper bid, he said.

"The contract is for five years and is valued at $3.469 million, which means Host International guarantees this amount to the Department of Airports," OIA Manager Robert E. Quincey said.

There won't be any change in personnel at OIA as a result of the contract. Marriott has been operating the local airport's restaurant and gift shop facilities since April 1981, according to Ken Kaufman, general manager of the OIA concession. He said that was when Marriott bought out the Fred Harvey chain of airport restaurants, one of them in OIA.

"The original contract was due in December, 1980," Kaufman said. "It took a long time to put together a bid package."

Marriott's acquisition of Fred Harvey restaurants complicated matters, he said. Then, in January of this year, Marriott purchased Host and made it the corporation's primary airport food and beverage division, Kaufman said.

At that time, he said, Host was already operating the Los Angeles International Airport concessions.

Since December, 1980, the airport commissioners have been authorizing Marriott to serve OIA on a month-to-month basis, Kaufman said.

Other companies submitting bids for the concession failed to meet bonding specifications, meant to guarantee the winner of the bid process would make at least $1 million in facility improvements, Kaufman said.

He said airport officials specified a forfeiture type bond be posted. All bidding companies except Host posted liability type bonds instead.

The five-year contract includes provisions for five, one-year options, "so it could go as long as 10 years," Kaufman said.

He explained the options were required because of the possibility a new airport terminal might be built at that time and it would mean moving all facilities.

Aside from operating the airport's restaurant, snack bar, bar and gift shop; Host also provides in-flight meals for about seven flights a day. That's about half of the airline meals prepared for OIA, Kaufman said.

His company, he said, is now considering expansion in that market as well.

Kaufman said planned facility improvements by Host will probably come closer to $2 million than $1 million. They include doubling the size of the coffee shop, doubling the size of the bar, adding a new gift shop in the west end of the terminal and expanding the size of the snack bar at that end of the building.

Host won't waste any time getting those improvements in.

Kaufman said between two and four months will be required to prepare plans and get approval, then another two months for construction.

He predicted some of the expansions will be done by March and all of them in time for the next summer rush season.

Host, he said, feels OIA growth is a sure thing to bank on. "It's going to go... We could certainly get more business if we had more capacity. At breakfast time and lunch time we can't fit more people in (the restaurant)."

County sells revenue bonds for housing

By DON GREEN
Staff Writer

After being shut out of the market last year, San Bernardino County recently completed the sale of $58.75 million in mortgage-revenue bonds to finance affordable housing.

Pamela Newcomb — housing development specialist for the county Office of Community Development — said the bond issue, which was closed last week, will provide financing at mortgage rates of 13.5 percent to buyers of homes in projects throughout the county.

That rate compares to about 16.5 percent with conventional financing and 15.5 percent under the Federal Housing Administration.

Throughout the county, the bonds are expected to provide the below-market financing for purchase of some 900 dwellings. In the West Valley and Fontana, more than $11 million of the bond issue will be devoted for purchase of 175 dwellings in eight projects.

The bonds are intended to assist affordable housing by making mortgage rates at below market levels available to buyers of new homes who meet income guidelines and other conditions. Except in certain targeted areas, only first-time home buyers qualify for the mortgage financing, Newcomb noted.

The tax-exempt feature of the mortgage-revenue bonds is the enticement for investors to purchase them at less than prevailing interest rates on taxable investments.

In the past two years, the county has pursued issues of mortgage-revenue bonds up until their annual Dec. 31 deadlines — successfully in 1980 with a $33.5 million issue completed on New Year's Eve and unsuccessfully in 1981.

Changing ground rules and poor market conditions prevented the county's bond sale last year. Newcomb said she knew of just three government issues of the bonds in California last year because of the tough conditions.

In contrast, county officials are hopeful of putting together a second issue for later this year.

Newcomb noted that the county has taken advantage of higher interest rates on short-term investments to help make the bond issue possible this year. The county carries the bonds and pays the interest to investors, with financing from front money provided by developers, until the mortgages are bought by home buyers.

"We got into the market at a good time," she said, adding, "A lot of California housing deals have to be done by August."

Ruling could affect city's Measure M

By NANCY WALLACE
Staff Writer

Upland's special ballot measure to provide city-operated paramedics, Measure M, could be directly affected by the state Supreme Court decision regarding Proposition 13 and the definition of a "special tax."

The city has proposed an item for the Nov. 2 ballot that would provide funding for paramedic service through the Upland Fire Department. Until Thursday, city officials presumed they would have to label the assessment a "special tax."

(Proposition 13 dictates that a special tax be approved by 66 2/3 percent of the voters, and so a comparable measure on the 1980 ballot failed because it received only 61 percent approval from Upland voters.)

Now the City Council may decide to change the label on the assessment. According to Thursday's decision, an assessment could be passed and implemented with a simple majority vote if the "levy placed in the general fund (is) to be utilized for general government purposes." Special taxes must get two-thirds approval, but general assessments need only a majority.

The paramedic program, according to Director of Finance Tim Brown, would be financed through the general fund. The paramedics would be listed as a division of the Fire Department in the city budget, and the Fire Department is funded through the general fund, Brown explained.

The proposed assessment will provide more revenue to the general fund with the understanding it will be placed in the Fire Department's budget, he said.

But the impartial analysis City Attorney Donald Maroney has already prepared tells voters the funds will be used for a specific purpose — the city-operated paramedic program. That language could qualify it as a "special tax," according to the court's decision; Maroney said the council has little time to decide to change the nature and language of the assessment in time to be printed on the November ballot.

Although the measure is being promoted for a specific purpose, Maroney observed, the revenues will actually improve all public safety services.

Stroke victims compete in 'Olympics'

More than 150 stroke victims and their families and guests attended the Stroker Olympic Picnic held recently at Ganesha Park in Pomona.

"What a thrill it was to see all of the enthusiasm and pure joy at having the opportunity to participate in formal competition once again," reports Joy Confer, director of the West End Center of the Organization for After-Stroke Resocialization.

Taking part in this first Stroker Olympics were members of the OASR of the Pomona Valley Center, Glendora Center, Industry Hills Center and the Ontario Center.

Five events were scheduled during the day. When trumpets called everyone to the bandshell where the colors were presented, "God Bless America" was sung and Clemmett Neibel, OASR board president, formally opened the games. Stroker Earl Tenney carried the torch to the Olympic flame.

Confer, MC for the day, introduced Don Harkey, who presented trophies to the Activity Center champions and reserve champions from the morning competitions.

— Mexican Dominoes winners were Glendora, Thyra Landin, champion, and Vicki Fox, reserve champion; Pomona, Donna Hanson, champion, and Andy Stanek, reserve champion; West End, Edna Nolte, champion, and Mary Blankenship, reserve champion; and Industry Hills, Gene Gunther, champion, and Charlotte Laughlin, reserve champion.

Horseshoe winners were: Glendora, Joe Bolt, champ, and Bret Gough, reserve; Pomona, Tenney, champ, and Frank Libershal, reserve; West End, Bob Langford, champ, and Tenney, reserve; and Industry Hills, Al Gebhardt, champion, and Max Gage, reserve champion.

After a noon luncheon at a 30-foot-long table, the center champions were called to the "play-offs" to determine the OASR Olympic Medallion winners.

Those winners were: Mexican dominoes — Hanson, gold medallion; Nolte, silver medallion; Landin, bronze medallion; and Gunther, bronze medallion.

Medal winners in horseshoes were: Bolt, gold; Tenney, silver; Langford, bronze; and Gebhardt, bronze.

Trumpets blared again calling everyone to the closing ceremony, where Marian Hillmann, office secretary, taught everyone the Stroker Olympic song and then the 1982 medallions were presented by Delores Martinez, board member. A mass balloon flight climaxed the activities with 150 balloons carrying the names of OASR Olympic attendees.

OASR offers a program to provide an opportunity to stroke victims to maintain dignity, have a chance to share in a social setting those personal triumphs and failures, to re-learn communication skills and have fun again. Family members also learn and understand about stroke and its after-effects, participate in counseling discussions and share experiences with other family members.

Fair Fine Arts Building to be renovated

The Los Angeles County Fair's Fine Arts Building is the focal point of this year's $175,000 capital improvement program.

The cost is high but Ralph Hinds, general manager of the fair, said he hopes the renovation of the building will reap up to $50,000 in revenues from year-round use of the facility.

Money to pay for the improvements is coming from profits generated by last year's fair.

Constructed in the 1940s, the building has been maintained but never renovated, he said.

The project includes re-roofing, installation of new glass doors, carpeting and burlap walls.

Lights have been installed on the perimeter walls and ceiling and track lights are also available. The building's acoustics have also been improved.

A flat-wire electrical system providing invisible outlets in various places throughout the building has been installed, along with new heating and air-conditioning. A catering kitchen and new restrooms will also be added.

The fountains and landscaping in the adjoining patio are also being upgraded.

Hinds said construction is expected to be finished in time for the fair's opening Sept. 9.

The fair takes priority but year-round use of the grounds is important, Hinds said.

"My philosophy is that the fairgrounds should be in peak condition year round. The grounds should look just as good in January as they do in September."

Once refurbished, the Fine Arts Building could be used for art, doll, gem and mineral shows, or for political fund-raisers, banquets and even wedding receptions," Hinds said.

He said plans are continuing for a proposed $41 million in improvements aimed at strengthening the fairground's marketability.

Negotiations are continuing with the California Thoroughbred Breeders' Association for construction of a $2.5 million covered sales pavilion that would accommodate 4,500 people and $18 million worth of improvements to the equestrian facilities.

Those improvements would include expanding the half-mile oval horse track to three-quarters of a mile, relocating some buildings, building 1,000 new horse stalls, putting in new offices and adding a restaurant and some recreation facilities.

Wayne E. Meyer

General Dynamics celebrates 30 years

General Dynamics Pomona marked its 30th anniversary Saturday as a major developer and producer of tactical weapon systems in the valley with an open house for some 5,500 employees and their families.

Rear Adm. Wayne E. Meyer, Navy Aegis Shipbuilding project director, Naval Sea Systems Command, spoke during the noon ceremony congratulating employees for helping to develop and produce tactical weapon systems.

At the same time, he challenged them to develop and produce even more capable systems.

"We need the type of innovation that can be found at the Pomona Division," he continued.

Ralph E. Hawes, vice president and general manager, told the employees that "you are the people whose efforts help to maintain the security of all Americans and our allies. These efforts have been responsible for many innovations and achievements in defense."

Among the division's achievements are the first application of inertial navigation of guided missiles, the first shoulder-fired anti-aircraft missile, closed-loop gunfire control, the first rolling air-frame missile and the first all electric guided missile.

The division was established in 1951 to produce guided missiles and to operate the Naval Industrial Reserve Ordnance Plant.

Today, the Pomona Division produces:

— Standard Missile 1 and 2, the primary air defense for 80 ships of the U.S. Navy and 29 ships of allied navies.

— Sparrow AIM, the primary medium-range air-to-air missile for the U.S. Navy and U.S. Air Force.

— Phalanx, the quick-reaction, automatic close-in weapon system for the U.S. Navy.

— Stinger, the shoulder-launched air defense missile system, for the U.S. Army and the U.S. Marine Corps.

— Viper, the shoulder-fired, short-range, unguided anti-tank weapon.

Some college courses no longer offered for free

By ANDREA ADELSON
Staff Writer

Chaffey College's widely-circulated fall schedule, received by most West Valley residents recently, makes no mention of what is to come. It was printed before the change was made.

But students wanting to take 22 subject areas — such courses as real estate, theatre arts and physical education — will not be able to unless they are willing to pay for them.

For the first time ever, the governing board of the community college system last week ordered districts to stop offering certain credit subjects, now supported by state funding.

Instead, those wishing to enroll in "avocational, recreational and personal development" courses will have to pay for them.

Savings realized to the state general fund by dropping support for 14 credit course areas is estimated at $30 million statewide, reported the chancellor's office, overseer of the 106-campus system.

Cuts were ordered by the state Legislature, acting on a report by an education commission whose findings have been angrily criticized as inaccurate by educators.

As many as 130 courses have been identified for possible deletion at the Chaffey campus. Some of those canceled courses will be offered for non-credit by the Community Services Department, at a cost ranging from $20 to $52.50, department director Erma Walsh said.

Because fees may discourage student enrollment, administrators believe the number of class offerings will ultimately be reduced. Physical education, theater arts and real estate are the hardest hit.

Chaffey College administrators do not view the course deletions as a savings, but as a $250,000 rug pulled out from under them.

Its effect is two-pronged. By not offering so-called "frill classes," the college will lose $250,000 in funding that accrues from student attendance. But the college may also lose additional money because it has yearlong contracts with full-time faculty who cannot legally teach non-credit courses.

"Life is not looking any better," Superintendent-President Samuel Ferguson opined.

"We don't anticipate losing students," he said. "But some disappointment, confusion and frustration."

This fall marks a transition period for the financially troubled community college system.

MADD members writing slogans for campaign

Candy Lightner, president of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers, is asking MADD members to compete in a contest to select a slogan for a public awareness campaign against drinking and driving.

The slogan should emphasize "intervention" and should stress the importance of keeping a drink driver from getting behind the wheel.

The winning slogan may be featured on television and radio public service announcements, billboards, posters and literature during a statewide campaign to heighten public awareness of the dangers of drunk drivers. The Intergovernmental Advisory Council on Alcohol, Drugs and Traffic Safety is conducting the competition and will select a slogan Aug. 16 from entries submitted by MADD and other organizations.

MADD members must submit their entries by Tuesday. Anyone wishing to participate may join MADD by sending $10 for an individual membership or $25 for a family membership. Members applications and slogan entries should be sent to MADD, 5330 Primrose, Suite 146, Fair Oaks, CA. 95628. Attention: Holly Moss.

MADD was founded by Lightner two years ago after her 13-year-old daughter was hit and killed by a drunk driver. The tax-exempt, non-profit organization's goals are to enact tougher drunk driving legislation, assist the victims of drunk drivers and reduce the numbers of deaths and injuries caused by drunk drivers through education.

Saving energy at home may be perilous to health

By JIMMY THORNTON
Copley News Service

Efforts to save energy in the home have made everyday life more dangerous, a federal safety official says.

People are turning to wood-burning stoves and other energy-saving products, but often misuse them or fail to install them properly, said Nancy Harvey Steorts, chairwoman of the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission.

Steorts (pronounced Stewarts) said in an interview that another problem is that people are sealing their homes so tightly to keep air-conditioning costs down that they are creating a new concern — indoor pollution.

Misuse of energy-saving products and indoor pollution are priority concerns of the commission, she said.

Another area that concerns her, Steorts said, is the number of deaths caused by toxic fumes released in home and commercial building fires.

She said things such as wall coverings and common furnishings can give off deadly fumes that can kill people before they can escape from a fire.

Steorts said that drastic cuts in her commission's budget have not crippled the agency, but have altered its course.

New goals, which stress cooperation rather than an adversary relationship between the commission and industry, are for individual industries to voluntarily set up their own safety standards, Steorts said. She added that the concept has been well received.

As examples, she cited the upholstered furniture and toy industries. More than 87 percent of those in the upholstered furniture industry are working toward cigarette-proof sofas, chairs and other furniture, she said, and last Christmas the commission and toy makers launched an information campaign to get consumers to buy the right toys for children.

When it's hot, your garden needs care

Since August is a warm weather month in many parts of California, the plants in your garden will appreciate some attention now. The most important consideration is watering followed by a preventative spray for unwanted pests, a mid-season application of fertilizer and keeping faded blooms pinched off.

Camellias, fuchsias and ferns, for example, are among those plants that require more water. Roses, lawns, trees and vegetables often do best when watered deeply and thoroughly with intervening dry intervals. Very deep rooted shrubs, deciduous fruit trees and citrus will profit by long, deep watering at regular intervals. There are many drought-resistant California natives that will require no summer watering once they are established. Remember, though, that California has many different soils and climates within its borders so it is difficult to set down exact rules that will apply to the entire state. Always consult your nurseryman when in doubt.

Some points to take into consideration are that shallow rooted plants should receive first consideration on those days when your time is limited along with any container plants. Watering in late afternoon or evening will reduce moisture loss caused by evaporation. However, if mildew is prevalent in your area, watering should be done early in the day because mildew thrives on dampness combined with the evening air.

Be on the lookout for pests such as aphids, caterpillars and thrips during the hot weather. These can be controlled by a number of products that your local member of the California Association of Nurserymen will have on his shelves. Also take inventory of the garden and snip off infected leaves, dead flowers and awkward shoots. You'll get better and more continuous blooms if you keep the dead blossoms trimmed off. Dwarf dahlias, cosmos, marigolds and petunias are among those annuals that definitely require frequent trimming.

Now is the time for an application of fertilizer. Fuchsias, chrysanthemums, bedding plants, lawns and fast blooming shrubs will all profit by feeding. Prune blackberries now as well as dividing any perennials that need it. Above all, remember that proper maintenance of your present plants and shrubs during this season can do much to increase the enjoyment of your garden this month.

Claremont official resigns

Fred Hawkins, community services director of Claremont, has resigned his post to accept a similar job in Palm Springs.

The resignation becomes effective Aug. 20. Hawkins will start his new job on Sept. 7.

Hawkins started with Claremont 11 years ago as parks superintendent. He then became director of parks and recreation. When the city reorganized departments in 1976, Hawkins was named director of the community services department.

Hawkins is a graduate of Cal Poly Pomona where he earned a degree in parks and recreation management. He has also pursued graduate studies at Cal State Los Angeles.

Hawkins said Palm Springs has a number of parks, a municipal golf course and a public library which are a part of his department.

He will also work with Norm King, a former Claremont city manager. King resigned as Claremont city manager in November 1979 to become city manager of Palm Springs.

Hawkins and his wife, Sherran, are parents of two daughters, Shannon and Denise.

The $2 fee includes night swimming, breakfast, snack, movie, crafts, games and lots of fun. Children must be 5 or older and need to bring sleeping gear. The last day to sign up is Tuesday. Researcher notes similarities between elephants, people

By JOHN M. BOGERT
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — At 10 feet tall and 13,000 pounds, they are the largest of all land mammals. For centuries man has compared himself to the elephant, symbol of strength and wisdom — and for good reason.

"They are like us," says Dr. Jack Adams, a California State University Dominguez Hills psychologist who has dedicated the last decade to understanding and preserving the giant beasts.

Surrounded by massive elephant skulls, a perfectly formed and bottled 6-week-old elephant fetus and box upon box of elephant memorabilia in his tiny office, the kindly looking professor rattles on about the little-understood animals.

"Aside from their two-year gestation period, they live for 70 years, and suffer from the same diseases including atherosclerosis and pneumonia. Female elephants are among the few mammals with mammary glands in the anterior part of the body, just like us.

"They live in close-knit groups. The mothers care for and protect their young and will even foster the calves of ill or dead mothers. They form circles of protection, like wagon trains, when threatened and will care for each other when they're sick.

"They can also use tools and are prone to drunkenness — eating fermented jungle plums — sunburn, hypochondria and fits of temper."

In short, their similarities give us all the more reason to save them from destruction, says the 63-year-old teacher. But before we can preserve the species, it is best we first understand them.

Adams' introduction to the arcane world of elephants came during a 1973 trip to Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) when he undertook to study agonistic, or fighting, behavior in animals.

"A ranger in Wankie National Park told me if I wanted to see aggression, go see the elephant darting, the process whereby they subdue small elephants with tranquilizer darts.

"It was heartbreaking to see the mother trying to raise her young off the ground, first with her tusks, then her trunk, and finally, with her feet. When the rangers approached, she charged."

Right into a rifle shot.

"What people don't realize is that the African elephants and all the other wild game exist only as long as the tourists spend dollars to see them. The minute the tourists stop, the government runs out of excuses for keeping the people from slaughtering and eating all the animals."

Meanwhile, researchers like Adams are trying to save the species, but only Adams has put together an elephant book.

Called "Wild Elephants in Captivity," it may well be the only elephant book ever printed to contain scientific data and a section on how to train one.

The reason for printing such data, gleaned from trainers worldwide, is simple.

"If they're to live, we need to know them. There are now only 30,000 Asian and 700,000 African elephants living in the wild, and they are basically incompatible with humans. We want their range and they want our vegetable crops.

"Since the first elephant entered the United States in 1795, there have been only two dozen babies born in captivity that have lived to maturity. The problem is compounded by the fact that the only creature that can tell when a female elephant is in estrus — heat — is the bull, and he ain't telling nobody.

"We know nothing about elephants. Take their feeding — in the wild they eat 105 different kinds of vegetation; in captivity they get hay. And with a digestive system that is only 30 percent efficient — compared to the human 80 percent — that contributes to why they generally don't live past the age of 30.

"On top of that, the 1973 Endangered Species Act prohibits the importation of elephants, which, well-meaning as it is, is disastrous. With the number being culled in the wild, the United States might very well be the last place on earth where elephants might survive."

North Americans will find lots of friends in the Irish

By RICHARD SULLIVAN
Copley News Service

LIMERICK, Ireland — If you're Irish, and you're looking for your roots, you could do worse than to start out in Joe Malone's, here on the banks of the River Shannon.

Joe Malone's is a pub, the kind of place that all those self-proclaimed Irish pubs in the States would like to be, but never can. After all, how can you export atmosphere?

Which is to say that Prop. Joe Malone's venerable old ale house at No. 10 Denmark St., with its loosely latched front door, off-and-on whitewashed walls, low ceiling, stone floors, elbow-polished bar and cheery fireplace, has aged well, if not exactly gracefully.

While Joe's small, but feisty, black-and-white dog, Guinness, ("of dubious and, probably, spurious, ancestry") observes the goings-on from a well-worn window seat by the front door, Joe will tell you that his establishment is in a building known to be at least 200 years old and that the pub itself has been there for at least 80 years.

"We don't know for sure for how much longer before that it was a pub," he said, pulling another pint of Guinness for a late-afternoon customer. "We lost a lot of records when they blew up the post office, you know," a casual reference to the abortive — and bloody — Easter Rising against the English in 1916.

He'll also tell you that the name of the street is no accident, running as it does along the edge of a Viking dig that dates back to the 11th century, when the Danes occupied the area.

"And do you know what the dig is called?" he asked. "It's called Watergate," he said, his round face breaking out into a smile as broad as Ireland itself.

Conversation — "crack" as it's called here — is rampant in the pub this rainy afternoon, and history, politics and sports — not necessarily in that order — are the major topics. It always seems to be that way in Ireland's pubs.

The people who are most concerned with the country's declining tourism business are well aware that places like Joe Malone's, as well as the picturesque countryside, the old castles and the friendly, outgoing people who inhabit this island nation, are major selling points to would-be vacationers.

And so, in an unabashed effort to emulate what Alex Haley did for blacks, the Shannon Development Co., in concert with the Irish Tourist Board and Aer Lingus, the national airline, has created what it calls a "scheme" to try to lure travelers of Irish descent back to their roots in the Old Ground.

According to a study by the University of Chicago, people of Irish extraction comprise 10 percent of the population of the United States — about 25 million in all. Slightly more than half of them, by the way, are Protestants.

Among these 25 million, the 12 most common (Common? Bite your tongue!) surnames are, in numerical order: Murphy, Kelly, O'Sullivan, Reilly, Ryan, O'Brien, Kennedy, O'Connor, Walsh, McCarthy, Burke and Daly.

Under the Shannon program ("scheme" seems vaguely sinister) "displaced" members of these clans are being invited to inquire about their family's roots by writing to Aer Lingus/Shannon

Old Irish saying

In response, they'll get a "Clan Information Pack." It consists of a condensed history of that person's clan, including the names of famous clan members; a guide to tracing the clan's roots in Ireland; an attractively illuminated, parchment-like clan scroll, and, as might be expected, a tourism brochure pitching "Irish Heritage Vacation Packages."

Those who eventually sign up for a vacation in Ireland under the program will receive a clan map of Ireland, a guide to that person's "Clan Places," discounts on various goods and services (including a special rate at one of the hugely popular medieval castle banquets) — plus an application form for a personal records search in Ireland by Hibernian Research Co. Ltd/The Association of Irish Professional Genealogists.

The records search costs $75. Armed with whatever information you can give them about your forebears in North America or Ireland, researchers in the cavernous halls of the National Library, the Genealogical Office at Dublin Castle and the Public Records Office of Ireland at the Four Courts, will search land records, birth and marriage certificates, old census reports, family histories, journals, etc., to try to place you as close as possible to the source of your roots. And they'll deliver it to you before you leave for Ireland. (For an additional fee, you'll be given a private briefing in Ireland on what the researchers have found.)

Although the program talks about "vacation packages," this does not necessarily mean guided or group tours. In fact, you'll likely enjoy yourself even more by going through the country on your own. Rental cars are available in the major cities and public transportation — cross-country buses and trains — are relatively inexpensive.

More importantly, the Irish people genuinely like

Ex-aerial daredevil returns to the skies

By LINDA KOZUB
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO — As 82-year-old Lillian Boyer was zipped into a flight suit, and anchored with belts into a 1941 biplane at Montgomery airfield, a friend yelled up to her:

"Now, Lillian! You promised not to get out and walk on the wings. Stay in the cockpit!"

Boyer flashed a smile, and gave a thumbs-up sign.

Today, she still exudes the enthusiasm she showed back in the 1920s when crowds would flock to see her perform spectacular aerial feats outside her aircraft.

From 1921 to 1928, Boyer was a barnstormer. A female daredevil and show-woman of the air. She was dubbed Queen of the Air. Girl of Nerve. Empress of the Skies. ...

"And just plain crazy," teases Boyer.

As a young woman, Boyer would dangle from a biplane piloted by her longtime associate and flying ace, Billy Brock. Her stunts included climbing from wing to wing; hanging from wing-skids, and transferring from a speeding race car on the ground, up a ladder and into a plane flying between 60 and 75 miles per hour.

Most of the stunts were done in the air with no parachute. She would perform anywhere from 500 to about 4,000 feet above ground.

"We had to go up real high for the loop-the-loop stunt, when I'd be standing on the center of the upper wing," she reminisced. "But usually, I didn't go much higher than 1,200 feet."

As a birthday gift, Willis Allen, a member of the board of the San Diego Aerospace Museum, took her for a brief air cruise in his Stearman biplane.

It was a trip in an open cockpit — a thrill she had not experienced in 53 years.

"I couldn't get out of this jumpsuit even if I had wanted to get out on the wing," laughed Boyer after the short flight around the field.

Of her high-flying times, Boyer said, "I had no fear."

"I don't know if it was just lack of good sense, but I wasn't afraid. And I had a lot of faith in God, and I knew he took care of me."

It was the challenge, adventure and excitement that kept Boyer and her Flying Circus going in those days. During summer months, she would perform at state fairs, mostly in the Midwest and South.

In all, Boyer performed in 143 car-to-plane changes; 15 airplane-to-airplane changes, and 37 parachute jumps — 13 over Lake Erie.

"And I couldn't even swim," she said.

In total, there were 352 shows. Many of the stunts were her own ideas. She was the first woman to transfer from a car to an airplane by grabbing the ladder and climbing aboard.

The act billed as her death-defying trademark was to hang by her teeth on a cable below a Curtiss JN4-D "Jenny" aircraft.

Edwin McKellar Jr., executive director of the Aerospace Museum, said there are slides and movies of these antics at the museum which show how risky the moves were.

"It just gives you chills to watch her, just hanging on with her hand. It's unbelievable," says McKellar.

Her friend, 81-year-old Harold Hawkins, insists, "She surpassed most of the men as an aerial exhibitionist. She was the greatest of all time."

"She did a handstand on a Canuck (a Canadian-built Jenny airplane) and she climbed all over that airplane like a squirrel climbs a tree."

If you want to avoid crowds, pay a visit to northern neighbor

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

At the request of some friends planning to visit Canada, I started to jot down a list of my favorite spots north of the border. But I soon gave up.

My decision to quit — and give them a book instead — came when I realized that after two single-spaced, legal-size sheets I was still in British Columbia.

A task similar to that of my pals awaits most anyone contemplating a Canadian holiday as the options are seemingly endless. And, in part, that's because Canada is a vast land — more than 3.8 million square miles that make it the world's second-largest country after the Soviet Union.

There is room, plenty of it, in which to roam. Space in which to discover an appealingly unique people, space in which to appreciate some of nature's most awesome creations and, not the least, space in which to view ourselves with keener insight.

Except in the larger cities, crowds are seldom encountered — the reason being that the fewer than 25 million who inhabit the nation's 10 provinces and two territories give it a population roughly the same as California's.

Ultimately, though, it's the amazing diversity of the terrain and the rich cultural mix that have long made Canada a prime vacation destination.

This year the call of the north rings with even greater allure, that of an exchange rate the likes of which has not been seen in decades.

Canada, it seems to me, should be approached the same way as a fine vintage, in measured sips. But introductory overviews can also be rewarding.

It's possible, for instance, to glimpse the breadth, if not the depth, of the land by road or rail within the time limits of an average vacation. The Trans-Canada Highway, for example, takes in the highlights between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Or you may opt for one of the fine trains with which VIA Rail, Amtrak's counterpart, links Halifax in Nova Scotia and Vancouver in British Columbia. Either way it's an arresting journey of roughly 3,7 miles during which it becomes obvious that this country born from France and nurtured by Great Britain has evolved its own distinct personality.

Canada's vast and variegated terrain appeals to individualists in search of unspoiled mountains in which to hike; solitary lakes where fish outnumber anglers; meandering rivers on which to canoe or raft; sprawling farms and ranches that welcome part-time farmers and urban cowboys; uncrowded shores on which to stroll, or clean sea waters in which to swim, surf or dive. That and more is found here.

But big-city excitement also abounds, there being more than a dozen large towns whose cultural, historic and social offerings would easily take days if not weeks to sample.

Both the out-of-doors and the cities are readily accessible to the independent traveler. But gregarious types, those who would rather let someone else take care of the logistics, or anyone looking for an economic and hassle-free Canadian holiday can choose from a wide variety of packages. Some of these provide every required element — such as transfers, excursions and meals — but others feature only such basics as air fare and accommodations.

As do a host of private tour operators, VIA Rail offers both escorted group packages as well as tours for those who prefer to schedule their own activities once at a destination. Hotel chains, such as Hilton International, and airlines serving Canada, such as Western, also have money-saving plans.

And there are seaborne options as well.

This summer and fall, at least two major lines will have cruises to ports in eastern Canada as well as New England. Royal Viking Line has scheduled 14-day voyages from New York on Aug. 27 and Sept. 10 aboard the Royal Viking Star, while Bahama Cruise Line offers seven-day sailings on the Veracruz between New York and Montreal every week now through Sept. 24. The ship can be boarded at either city.

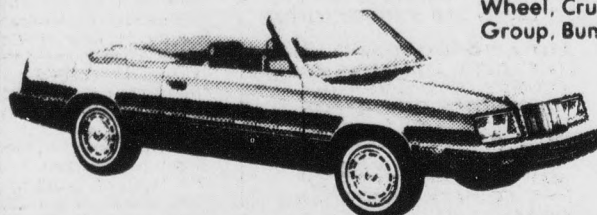

On the west coast, Princess and other top cruise companies have ships plying the glorious Inside Passage while en route from Vancouver to Alaska now through fall. Simpler and less costly voyages are possible aboard the casual ferryboats of the B.C. Ferry Corp. which take passengers and vehicles between Port Hardy on northern Vancouver Island and Prince Rupert on the upper shores of British Columbia just below Alaska; on certain sailings these 20-hour journeys include a couple of interesting stops along the way.

How one gets to the home of the Maple Leaf and which of its wondrous corners one discovers or sees again with the enhanced perception of a return visit are variables.

Parents push pool safety after tragedy

By JIM MARXEN
Staff Writer

A long weekend awaited the Park family as they tidied their yard in anticipation of Fourth of July guests.

Fireworks were planned and 1½-year-old Jennifer Park was eagerly awaiting the show.

That Saturday as she played in her backyard, Jennifer's father was clearing a brushy area on the hill behind their home in Rancho Cucamonga.

Her mother, Wendy, was inside the house working.

Both parents kept a watchful eye on their daughter as they went about their chores.

For a moment Bob Park turned his back on Jennifer, who continued to play with the family dog. Coincidentally, Wendy walked away from the window at the same instant.

"By instinct we both sensed at the same time to look at her (Jennifer)," Bob said. "I saw the dog standing by the steps with its head turned and I knew something was wrong."

What went wrong that day changed the Parks' lives forever. For some reason Jennifer clambered up a set of steps and fell or jumped into the family's swimming pool.

"I started running," Bob said. "And I was yelling for my wife to call the fire department."

When Bob reached the patio, he saw his only child floating face down near the pool's edge. He lifted the unconscious youngster out and amid the wail of approaching sirens, administered what he knew of cardio-pulmonary resuscitation (CPR).

Paramedics rushed the girl to the hospital where she has lain in a coma for the past three weeks.

The shattering event prompted Bob and Wendy

Park to launch a campaign aimed at preventing similar tragedies.

"Everything in my life that's been taken away from me, I've been able to get back," Bob said.

"This one I can't. It's one of those strange things." To overcome the loss, he is talking — talking to anyone who will listen to him — about swimming pools and children.

He hopes to get enough groundswell support to push local legislators into introducing bills on swimming pool safety.

Park wants a law enacted that will require pool owners to post CPR instructions within view of swimmers.

He also hopes to push alarm companies into marketing a device that goes off when the surface of a pool is disturbed.

And on top of it all, he wants people to learn CPR.

"During those three to five minutes before the fire trucks arrive, you've got your baby's life in your hands," Bob said.

"It just takes an hour or so to learn and that's just a minimum amount of time when it comes to saving your child's life."

Although he had never gone to a CPR class, Park said he knew enough to help his daughter.

Wendy and Bob Park plan to enroll in a CPR course later this summer.

In the meantime, the two are giving their friends and neighbors an additional message.

"Never let the kids out of your sight," Bob said.

"I was driving down in Corona and I saw this little girl playing outside by herself and it scared the hell out of me."

"Jennifer had a ball and chain around her, but all it took was that five minutes or so."

Ironically, Park had ordered a gate for his pool area only three days before the accident.

Having just moved into the house, the Parks found that the previous owners had installed a wall but had not sealed the pool area off completely. A gate would have kept Jennifer away from the water.

"I got a call from the gate installer just the other day and I told him to come and put it in," Bob said in a voice that reflected the twist of fate that had befallen his daughter.

He also plans to talk to service clubs and other organizations that will listen to his pleas on water safety.

"I talk about it to everybody," he said. "My friends, my family and my associates are quite a bit more aware of it (pool safety) now. That child touched a lot of people."

As for Jennifer, she continues to lay in a coma at Loma Linda University Medical Center. Her parents hold out hope and wait for a sign that their nightmare is ending.

Bob and Wendy have even taped their voices and familiar sounds in hopes that replaying the cassette will spark Jennifer.

"I know she hears but she just can't do anything about it," Wendy said. "She's stubborn. She's got that going for her."

Pomona Valley Day will open county fair

Opening day of Los Angeles County Fair in Pomona, Sept. 9, has been designated as Pomona Valley Day, said Gary Delph, the fair's special events coordinator.

The Pomona Progress Bulletin and the Pomona Chamber of Commerce will sponsor the day. Free admission tickets to the fair, good only on this special day, will be available through the newspaper and the Chamber of Commerce.

Don Russell, advertising manager, said the Progress Bulletin will carry advertisements later this month containing free admission coupons.

Regular admission to the fair will be $4 general; $2 for children 6 through 12 years of age; $3 for seniors (62 years of age and older), Monday through Friday; and no charge for children through 5 years of age.

A special Pomona Valley Day parade is scheduled at 11 a.m. and will include the three local high school bands, Delph said.

Other opening day events will include the first day of racing with pari-mutuel wagering and the first of two appearances of singer Dottie West at the Grandstand at 8 p.m.

Hemet fair under way

Officials at the Farmers Fair of Riverside County in Hemet are looking forward to a record-breaking fair attendance.

Friday's highlights include the first day of the PRCA Rodeo at 7 p.m., the only event in the fair for which there is an additional charge.

Formation of parks panel given lukewarm backing

By JIM MARXEN
Staff Writer

Conceptual approval was given recently to a proposal that calls for creation of a parks commission in Rancho Cucamonga.

But whether the City Council actually creates a commission is apparently still up in the air.

In a confusing set of formal motions and counter motions, the council eventually directed its administrative staff to develop a list of alternatives for a panel that would oversee park and recreation facilities. From that list, the council could develop an ordinance establishing the commission when it takes up the matter again on Sept. 1.

A unanimous council approved a somewhat compromised proposal introduced by Councilman Richard Dahl.

Dahl originally wanted the panel named "Parks and Trails Commission." Councilmen pushed for elimination of the word trails and supported inclusion of the word "advisory" in the commission's title.

The council's support wasn't as vigorous as a unanimous vote might make it seem.

Councilman Phillip Schlosser questioned the need for a commission in light of the fact that a parks committee composed of two councilmen and Community Services director Bill Holley already exists.

In addition, questions remain regarding the commission's structure and role in the city's decision-making process.

Councilman Chuck Buquet said he did not interpret the council's action as definite affirmation of Dahl's proposal.

In fact there is a chance the idea will not be approved because of unanswered questions concerning the commission's role, Buquet said.

A member of the Alta Loma Riding Club, Dahl felt a parks commission would create more public access to city government and would help the city expand its park and recreation facilities and oversee a complicated trail system.

"Would it (a park commission) have gotten us any farther in the last four years?" Schlosser asked, referring to the difficulty the city has had in obtaining and developing parks.

In questioning the need for another commission, Schlosser said residents wait until a matter reaches the City Council to argue their position rather than spending time before an advisory panel.

"But a lot of times the commission takes away the heat from the council," Dahl argued.

The idea originally appeared headed for defeat. Comments from Buquet and fellow Councilman Jim Frost indicated that Dahl would not get enough support for his proposal.

Frost and Buquet agreed that the role of overseeing parks and recreation could be addressed by the existing Citizens Advisory Commission (CAC).

Buquet, however, later agreed that another advisory commission is a better alternative because of the CAC's size (it has 15 members).

He said he still has a number of questions regarding a parks commission including its size, term of office, scope and decision-making power.

Frost said the council's action Wednesday gives its members more time to study the issue and see some of the pitfalls that may occur with creation of a new commission.

"It's a little premature to go out and create another commission without doing more homework," he said.

"It (a park commission) is another level requiring substantial staff support and those constant support services have potential of being quite expensive," Frost said.
